

Jobecca's New Home – The Canal Works fit-out

Original view from mid-office toward original door location (since moved). Mid process photo shows bookkeeping half wall, finished floor pre-carpeting.

Above left is an Inside partial view of server room. This area will be dedicated to configuring new systems and any internal hardware work required. The area in front of the beam is where we'll house our server cabinets.

Above right is a view of our duct work and cable tray. As a fan of "Brazil", I can tell you that our "ducts are working." I love the juxtaposition of the colors and the "server room look" of the cable tray within the office space. Bottom left is more detail on the cable tray where it splits off toward the termination point in the server room.

My daily motivation, Josh & Rebecca (Jobecca...get it), in Dad's office pre-carpeting. Michael's office, nearing completion
